

Drew Barrymore on the other side of the camera for Whip It

DO you fancy yourself as a film-maker?

Women film-makers are breaking through and from March 4-12, the Birds Eye View Film Festival celebrates them all. At various locations in central London, the festival showcases videos, films and documentaries made by women. As well as Drew Barrymore's Whip It and Kathryn Bigelow's The Hurt Locker, catch feature film Entre Nos, about a Colombian woman struggling to survive in New York, and Sundance Grand Jury Prize-winning documentary Rough Aunties, about a group of women in South Africa, who bring child sex abusers to justice. There are animation and training workshops, and journalist Miranda Sawyer presents new music videos. Tickets are around £9, but some events are free. For details, see Birds-eye-view.co.uk

